To whom it may concern:

I am very pleased to write this letter of recommendation for Changyun (PJ) Han, a rising senior at UT Austin, who is applying for internship at your company. I first met Changyun last year August when he enrolled into my FIN 357 (Business Finance) class. FIN 357 is an introductory finance course required for all UT business major students.

While enrolled in my class, Changyun served as a study group facilitator, which allowed me to interact with him more often than other students. Facilitators are hired as part of the Peer-Led Undergraduate Studying (PLUS) Program, which aims to assist students enrolled in historically difficult courses by offering class-specific, weekly study groups. Facilitators are students enrolled in the class who have been selected to lead the study groups. As a facilitator, Changyun had to operate tutoring sessions and create practice questions. He carried out his role with diligence, benefiting many of his fellow students.

Changyun also performed well in class. I remember him as a hard-working and self-disciplined student. He never missed a class or any assignment. His weekly quiz scores were always perfect. This shows his habit of reviewing class materials on a regular basis and how attentive he is during classes. I do not think his final grade (A-) fully reflects these virtues of his.

Changyun is currently participating in UTNY, an internship-first experiential learning program that provides registered UT Austin students the opportunity to live, work and learn in New York City. Internship at your company will not only allow him to successfully complete this program, but also serve as a great platform for him to pursue his career goals. I would greatly appreciate if you can give him a serious consideration.

Cordially yours,
